Politics.

An editor from Puget sound thus wrote the word politics as a plural word, whereupon the Chicago Tribune editor takes exception, and gives the following reasons why the word should be used in the singular number:

"Politics is common contraction of the word politic, which is derived from the Greek word polis, signifying city. Politic, therefore, means city-like, and politics, city-like things. Politics is the science of city-like things, and is therefore singular in number. Politics is not a plural word, and cannot be used as such. Politics is not a plural word, and cannot be used as such. Politics is not a plural word, and cannot be used as such

The Republican Platform.

We have before us the resolutions of the Republican State Convention, which met at Sacramento on the 11th inst., and nominated Governor Irwin for re-election. The platform is a long one, and we shall not attempt to publish it in full. We will, however, give the principal resolutions, and such others as we may deem worthy of comment.

The first resolution endorses the Republican National platform of 1872, and the second endorses the Republican State platform of 1871. The third resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1873. The fourth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1874. The fifth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875. The sixth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875. The seventh resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875. The eighth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875. The ninth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875. The tenth resolution endorses the Republican State platform of 1875.
